

Physical Education

Job-A-Like and Workshop

25th to 27th March 2017

Sponsored by CEESA and AIS
Bucharest

Facilitated by Andy Vasily

Saturday, 25th March 2017 - Job-a-like

Sunday, Monday, 26th / 27th March - Physical Education workshop

There will be many themes explored throughout this 2-day workshop that focus on deepening the ways in which we deliver our PE programs. The ultimate goal of our 2 days together will be to explore proven strategies and approaches that help young people to be more fully engaged in the physical education experience. Getting students to embrace being physically active for life requires a mindset that allows them to take risk and have their own entry points to learning. We will cover the following areas during this workshop:

- Concept-Based planning in PE
- The Power of Provocation in Our Teaching
- Inquiry-Based Learning in PE
- Unpacking Essential Skills and Outcomes in PE
- Visualization and Mindfulness in Sport Mastery
- Assessment Design in PE
- Effective Grouping in PE
- The Importance of Student Voice and Choice
- Making Learning Explicit and Visual in PE
- Movement Composition Fun

Andy Vasily is a leading teacher who has taught at International Baccalaureate schools in 5 different countries over the past 18 years. He completed his teaching training at the University of Windsor in Ontario, Canada. Andy is currently a pedagogical coach at the King Abdul University of Science and Technology in Saudi Arabia. He is also an international educational consultant and founder of the award winning blog www.pyppewithandy.com. Andy previously worked as a Child-Youth Counsellor at a young offender's facility in Windsor, Ontario and it was through this experience that he first realized the stumbling blocks and injustices that many of these young people faced in their daily experience. As a direct result of seeing a need for change, he pursued a full-time career as an educator. Wanting to push his own understanding of teaching and learning to a deeper level, Andy made the decision to begin blogging in order to share his teaching practice and connect with other educators and top researchers around the world. The value that he saw in this exchange of vision and practical applications led to an enriched professional learning journey that he has shared with practitioners and scholars alike. Andy is an innovator in the area of education and has continued growing his commitment to student learning by bringing the global community together to create meaningful progress in the way students learn around the globe.
