

Teaching for Transformation:
Instructional Strategies that Make Student Thinking Visible

Presented by Dr. Fran Prolman

Saturday, January 25, 2014

8:30 AM - 4:30 PM

American School of Warsaw

This practical, kinesthetic, research-based institute offers dozens of instructional strategies to get into your students' heads, practice cognitive empathy, differentiate your instruction based on real-time data, and make your student thinking visible in creative, critical thinking ways. This institute will raise your consciousness, validate your current skill set, and expand your repertoire of visible thinking skills for immediate application in your classroom.

This institute answers the following essential understandings:

- How do my beliefs about my role as a teacher and my students' role as learner guide the decisions that I make in my classroom?
- What instructional strategies am I consciously choosing to expand rigor, higher level thinking, visible thinking and student reflection?
- How do I consciously incorporate 21st Century skills that make thinking visible?

This institute is grounded philosophically by an even bigger essential question,

“How do I ensure that my classroom instruction is consciously skillful on a daily basis??”
