Dear Colleagues,

The Office of Overseas Schools, in conjunction with AAIE, is making the final plans for two excellent summer workshops which will present the best, research based inclusive classroom strategies for international educators.

The first four day workshop will be held in Miami, Florida from June 19th to the 23rd on the campus of the lovely Nova Southeastern University. The workshop facilitator will be Pat Wolfe, an internationally known expert in the field of brain research. Participants will not only take home strategies to use in their own classroom; but will also be given tools for developing an in-service program for other teachers and administrators.

The second four day workshop will take place from June 26th to the 30th in Old Town Alexandria, Virginia which is just minutes from Washington, D.C. Well-known international educators, Bill and Ochan Powell, will present a model for designing classroom strategies in a way that will address the learning profile of all students. The characteristic in common in all of our schools is diversity. Bill and Ochan will discuss ways in which this diversity of learning styles, interest, and aptitude can be utilized to enhance learning for all students. In addition to the Powells, educators from the Washington D.C. area will be giving short presentations on specific types of students and how their need can best be met.

Applications are available on the AAIE website: www.aaie.org. Space is limited so please encourage your staff members to register early to take advantage of these exciting opportunities.

Program fees listed below include four nights of hotel accommodations, breakfast and lunch, as well as sightseeing activities in each of the respective cities.
